In legend, Avalon is a mythical island that appears in the stories of King Arthur. Supposedly, it was the place where Arthur's legendary sword Excalibur was forged, and as a place where magic was powerful. Arthur even went there to heal from the wounds he suffered after one of his many battles. While several locations in England and the UK have been linked to Avalon as inspiration for the fictional island, it is most widely taken to be simply a fantastic part of the Arthurian legends. I wonder what the rules should say in a situation like this. First, the all-in bet should be taken back and the player should be free to do whatever he wants when it is his turn, since that would give the initiative back to the other player. Second, the player should get some kind of punishment. Maybe a warning the first time and then lose a Big Blind the second time. Something like that.
