The random number generator matches certain numbers with card combinations. The game designer sets the pay schedule on the game, so a certain number of combinations of each type are plugged into the algorithm. Every second, the RNG spits out thousands of numbers, each which corresponds to some card combination. Thus, any one-thousandth of a second, several numbers might be generated. At the split second you hit the "Deal/Draw" button, one of these numbers has been chosen. The machine thus doesn't go through hot or cold phases; it all depends on whether you hit the button in this fraction of a second or that one.
