Or worse - deliberately misleading players into making deposits or playing games or participating in tournaments. One of the most common ways of doing this is to advertise free money bonuses without clearly telling players about the terms and conditions attached to them. Creating the impression that this money is freely available to players when it actually isn't. And then making players go through all kinds of red tape to sort out when they can withdraw winnings that are linked to these bonuses. Or making the wagering conditions impossibly high so that players can effectively never receive their so-called free money.
